

Stacey Rosema

What she does...

Stacey is a violin teacher and is currently busy with her Suzuki violin teachers training. She also teaches class music at a playschool. Stacey often takes gigs and plays for orchestras as well (UP4Strings, PSO).

Role in String Things

Stacey play at events and weddings for String things, she has also recently taken on the role of a rehearsal manager, making sure all the practice sessions run smoothly.

Why I love music...

“ Music brings people together and opens up a whole new world of communication and expression. It is an art, a language and a very rational practice, combining logical thinking with creative ‘out of the box’ thinking. Music is part of who we are, we do not ask why we make music, we just intuitively enjoy and participate. ”

Working for String Things

“ Working for string things is always great, you get to make music with a wonderful team of musicians, and play at a variety of stunning events. The management team is always on top of things, so I always have peace of mind knowing that things will run smoothly. ”

What you enjoy about being a rehearsal manager:

I enjoy managing rehearsals because I get to share my vision with the group and experiment with different soundscapes, and it's very rewarding to hear these musical ideas materialise. It's a joy to see my colleagues and myself grow and develop in skill and experience.
